U.S. Data Show 25% Drop in Combat-Ready Units Since 1980

By Fred Hiatt Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - After three years and $632 billion of the Reagan military buildup, there are 25 percent fewer army units certified as ready for combat than there were in 1980. The number of air force units considered "fully or substantially" combat-ready also declined from 1980 to the fall of 1983, by 15 percent, according to internal Defeuse Department documents. Only the oumber of combat-ready navy units, which includes individual ships, was up, more than doubling. But the mission-readiness of navy aircraft had slipped from 86 to 83 percent. The military's measures of readi-

Democrats Offer Plan to Cut Deficit

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Democrats on the Joint Economic Committee said Monday the federal budget deficit should be cut $200 billion over three years by imposing a form of flat-rate tax and bolding military spending increases to 4 percent a year.

The proposal by the committee, which draws members from both houses of Congress, is twice as much as President Ronald Reagan's request for a $100-billion "down payment" on the deficit over three years. Republicans on the committee agreed with the need for spending cuts, but rejected the Democrats' proposal for a basic 14 percent personal income tax with surcharges on higher incomes. "I don't see any evidence that the country is headed for recession," said Representative Daniel E. Lungren, a California Republican. "Some of us are not prepared to look at tax increases until we get spending cuts."

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Justice Department has gone to court to challenge actions taken hy the city of Birmingham, Alabama, under a court decree that the department signed three years ago to help blacks and women gain promotions in the city's police and fire

The Justice Department is joining 10 white police officers and firefighters who contend that Birmingham violated their rights by promoting blacks and women under the decree.

The employees, all of them men, filed lawsuits last year in which they contended that they had been denied promotions because they were white. The policemen also charged that they had suffered discrimination on the basis of sex. According to the suits, some lessqualified blacks and women had been hired or promoted to meet "numerical quotas."

Birmingham officials responded that the city's hiring practices follow the requirements of an affirmative action plan approved by a federal court and the Reagan administration in 1981.

"I am greatly disappointed at the position of the Justice Department an extensive plan of affirmative acwhich is changing sides on a decree

William Bradford Reynolds, the assistant U.S. attorney general for "The consent decree does not civil rights, said Saturday that the terminate our rights," said Raythe altegations in the white employees' suits were true.

"But," he said, "if there is an allegation of discrimination, the government's responsibility under the law is to come in and say we're against discrimination on account of race."

The Justice Department sued the city of Birmingham in 1975, charging that there was a pervasive "pat-tern and practice" of illegal job discrimination against hlacks and women. After a long trial, the Jus-tice Department helped negotiate the consent decree, which set forth tion, including numerical goals for Numerical goals and quotas are contrary to Reagan administration policy. But a Justice Department lawyer, Richard J. Ritter, signed the decree on May 19, 1981, three days before Attorney General Wilvene in the cases on the side of the liam French Smith attacked racial white male employees because their quotas in his first major speech on allegations, if true, "establish a civil rights. nied that they were trying to undermine the consent decree. But in carrying out the decree for the benefit of blacks and women, they said, Birmingham officials must not discriminate against white men. In Birmingham, blacks account for 19 percent of the police force and 13 percent of the firefighters. In 1981, when the consent decree was adopted, 13 percent of the po-

Mr. Shamir said Mr. Reagan also had informed him that he had saved a copy of the film because he believed that, in time, people would question what had happened. Many years later. Mr. Reagan was asked by a member of his family whether the Holocatist had occurred, Mr. Shamir recalled being the Austrian investigator of war crimes, met with Mr. Reagan in the White House and heard a similar story. Mr. Wiesenthal later told a reporter that he and Mr. Reagan had held "a very nice meeting." during which the president related "some of his personal remarks from the end of the war."

Rabbi Marvin Hier, dean of the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, also was present. He told the reporter that Mr. Reagan had said he was "a member of the Signal Corps taking pictures of the camps" and that he had saved a copy of the full and shown it a year later to a person who thought the reports were exaggerated.

But it is indisputable that Mr. Reagan never filmed a Nazi death camp. Mr. Reagan had a commission in the cavalry reserve, then a part of the U.S. Army, and was called to active duty in April 1942. He spent the war with the First Motion Picture Unit of the Army Air Corps, making training films in Hollywood and living at home.

The White House did not react tightly to queries about accounts given by Mr. Shamir and Mr. Wiesenthal, both of whom are fluent in English and are known for their Ma'ariv. It was confirmed last week grasp of detail. Robert Sims, a deputy press secretary, said: "There's spondent in Jerusalem by the Israe- no story here. The only story is that Subsequently, the White House chief of staff, James A. Baker 3d. asked Mr. Reagan about the meetings with Mr. Shamir and Mr. Wie senthal.

The president's account. Mr. Baker said, was that he had seen a film of the death camps while working on a training movie, remembered that World War I atrocities had been questioned and 'didn't want atrocities against the Jewish people to be forgotten." So he kept a copy of the film and, when "a Jewish friend" questioned him about it a year or two later. showed him the copy, Mr. Baker

About 37 million people — 16.6 percent of the population — moved between 1981 and 1982, about the same rate as the previous year, the hureau said Saturday in its annual report on geographic mobility. "However, comparison with the

A Break in the Wall

The flow of refugees out of East Germany has increased conspicuously. The numbers rose in January and then, about two weeks ago. rose sharply again. The East Germans have been issuing about 100 exit visas a day, by far the largest volume since the Berlin Wall cut off the last open route to the West in 1961.

The East German government is trying to deal with tension that has been generated by economic decline and aggravated by anxieties over nuclear missiles. Standards of living in the country have been eroded by the severe reces-sion that began with the international lending crisis several years ago. East Germany urgently needs new loans. While the West Germans are willing to lend, they insist on a closer regard to human rights in the east.

But the East Germans have another reason to speed up the exit visas. They are, in effect, selling many of them in West Germany for up to $20,000 each — releasing people labeled "political prisoners" only on payment of a fee that, they claim, compensates the state for the cost of those persons' education. The refugee operation has turned into a modest but reliable source of bard currency for East Germany.

Ironically, the Soviet campaign against the new NATO missiles seems to have generated serious internal trouble in East Germany. The Russians sought to persuade West Europeans that deploying the new missiles would make them targets of nuclear attack. When the Russians let it be known that they were deploying new missiles of their nwn in East Germany, the East Germans drew the obvious conclusion That is the point at which the peace movement there began to gather visible support. The higher numbers of exit visas come at a time when the East German government is trying to suppress that movement. Perhaps, among their other purposes, the exit visas are also providing a way to get rid of troublemakers without offending the bankers in the West.

But there is a dilemma for East Germany. It never helps a government when people begin to farm long lines in desperation to leave. One of the people in the line is a niece of Willi Stoph, East Germany's prime minister — which, since most East Germans watch West German television, is now as well known on one side of the border as the nther.

East Germany continues to be the richest of the East European countries. Despite its industrial wealth, the outflow of people continues, and the numbers of people taking the hazardous step of requesting visas keeps rising. The government's dilemma sharpens. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Question of Prayer

will lobby Congress about religion this week. Thousands will pray into Tuesday morning for a constitutional amendment allowing orga-nized prayer in pubbe schools. A smaller but no less devout group will buid a counter-vigil as the Senate debates proposals on prayer.

The pro-amendment forces, led by Protestant evangelicals and by President Reagan, contend that the Supreme Court has "expelled God from the schools" by forbidding statesponsored prayer and Bible reading in class. The opponents, including leaders of Baptist, Episcopal, Quaker, Presbyterian and Jewish congregations, argue that the court has properly protected all religion by preserving the sepa-ration of church and state. We fervently bope that the opponents will prevail.

The United States is a religious nadon, But one great mark of its religiosity has always been its tolerance of, indeed insistence on diversity. The instrument of that tolerance has been the firm distinction between matters of state and matters of conscience. Contending Protestant sects have all flourished in the United States. So have Roman Catholics, Jews, Moslems, all believers and, to a remarkable extent, also nonbelievers. How these groups bave refrained from imposing their faiths on one another, and have been constitutionally restrained whenever they lost their restraint,

Two congregations of honorable Americans ill lobby Congress about religion this week.

The Supreme Court has been the faithful custodian of this essential freedom. In the often difficult effort to find the line between state and faith, it has rightly prevented the government-paid schoolmaster from pressing hildren who are conscripted to attend classes to pray or read the Bible there. For Congress to stand by that principle in no way demeans religious practice anywhere else. President Reagan has been reckless in arguing ntherwise, probably only for political gain. He, of course, has every citizen's First Amendment right to speak and to pray. But as head of government, he is sworn to be neutral concern-

He should not be sermonizing on this and nther issues in language that exalts Protestant faiths over others. And he should oot be irresponsibly confusing the difference between pushing religion at impressionable children and having adults pray or otherwise register a religious deference in some public forums. Even those who would force religion into the Constitution are divided about the proper kind of amendment, Three amendments, with shifting sponsorships, are up for debate. The Senate should spurn them all and continue to keep government out of these obviously contentious but truly private and personal issues. -

The USIA Blacklist

Regularly, the staff at the United States is also, necessarily, being investigated. It is worth coting, meanwhile, that politics Information Agency recommended names of people the agency might send to speak abroad about the United States. Sometimes, in the Reagan administration as in previous administrations, the policy people said yes, sometimes they said oo. Some staff member finally decided that too many staff cominations were being rejected for pobtical reasons, and made pubbe a list of more than 80 people who had been rejected over a period of almost three years. This is the oow-famous USIA "blacklist."

"Blacklist" — the word has ugly connotations. For people to be disqualified automatically as overseas speakers on the basis of their politics alone is an abuse. It is also a default on the USIA's obligation to represent the United States in something close to its true diversity. Several inquiries into this offensive practice are in progress, in the Senate and at USIA. The agency's sudden disposal of internal worksheets, on which officials had indicated the thinking behind their choices of speakers, was oot the only grounds for rejection. A small number of speakers recommended by the staff were dead or otherwise unavailable. Some conspicuously liberal or Democratic names were approved. There is a further aspect. Is anyone scriously contending that no political criteria can be applied to such a program? Surely this has oot been the case before.

Is anyone arguing that such forceful critics of Reagan arms control policy as Paul Warnke, say, or Representative Thomas Downey should have been dispatched to speak on Reagan arms control policy? One does oot have to approve of Mr. Reagan's politics or his direction of the USIA to accept that any administration sending speakers abroad must strike a balance between broad representation nf the country and specific representation of its policies. What evidently happened bere is that the USIA struck it in the wrong place. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

That Other Oil-Rich Gulf

The developed world is still curiously reliant on Gulf oil. The significance of this should not be lost on Europeans or nn the Japanese as they contemplate the evidence of the continned U.S. commitment to keeping open the Strait of Hormuz. Yet it seems to be.

The paramount American strategie interest is now in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean, both because that is the area through which most of its oil imports pass and because the potential dangers of political instability there cast a sharper shadow nn the United States than do those in the Middle East or Asia. We should not forget that other gulf, since in any major European emergency the NATO alliance would plan to ferry more than one million men and 20 million tons of fuel, equipment and stores across the Atlantic, ninetenths of it by sea and the vast majority of that from ports on the Gulf of Mexico or the Caribbean. ... The Europeans and Japanese should not let the Americans do it all themselves in the Strait of Hormuz.

The Democrats' Bad Strategy

NEW YORK — The Democratic candidates had better start planning some fairly radical changes in strategy or they will face humiliating defeat in the November

Up to now, the Democratic strategy has been simple — criticize President Reagan at every opportu-President Reagan at every opportu-nity. Criticize him on the economy, the environment, foreign policy, his staff, even his vacations and work style. This "shotgun" approach ap-peared to be working when unem-ployment was at 10 percent and large numbers of people feared los-ing their jobs. But now that the economy has turned around, the polls reflect the ineffectiveness of this negative strategy.

Mr. Reagan won election in 1980 principally because of dissatisfac-tion with the Carter administration. But his campaign offered the American people more than just criticism: He presented a philosophy of governing—lower spending, lower taxes, a tougher defense—that many voters, including Democrats, accepted. He emphasized the values of family and religion.

How have the Democrats re-sponded? By talking about raising taxes, giving more to the poor and minorities and redistributing income. These are not values that can appeal to mainstream Democrats or win elections in 1984. To compound the Democrats' problems, most of the presidential contenders have incorporated the following bad ideas into their litany: Bad idea No. 1: Attack Mr. Reagan for his "leadership by amnesia." In fact, leadership is the president's strongest issue. Voters overwhelmingly regard him as a stronger leader than any of his Democratic challengers — a deep impression that will not be erased by strident remarks from the Democrats.

Bad idea No. 2: Focus on the deficits. True, Mr. Reagan's policies have brought record deficits. But most voters believe that the Republicans are still the party that can best cut spending and reduce deficits. By emphasizing deficits, the Democrats are emphasizing a Republican argument and helping the opposition.

Bad idea No. 3: Harp on fears about the future. In fact, most Americans are satisfied with the direction things are going and most are confident about the future. People are frightened if you mention what Mr. Reagan did in the past, but not by the way the immediate future appears to be turning ont.

The Democratic nominee must have a plan to change the course of the economy without playing up the party's weaknesses. The Democratic Party cannot call the president "unfair" to the poor and suggest aid only for the poor and elderly. The appeal must be with a program that helps all segments of the electorate, especially the middle class. The Democrats should shift their emphasis away from the so-called catitlement programs and call for re-building the services that made America great — education, trans-portation, housing and commitment to technology. As Gary Hart's successes show, a commitment to new ideas is essential for the Democrats.

The Democrats must take advantage of Mr. Reagan's liabilities rather than play to his strengths. Most voters believe that he has significantly cut government spending ac-celerating the deterioration of the services that people need. The Democrats can take advantage of this, arguing that the nation's future depends not on continued neglect but on rebuilding these essential services. Further, they should point out, these goals can be accom-plished without raising taxes or in-creasing budget deficits: The money can be found by lowering interest rates, postpouring military expendi-tures and closing tax loopholes. To win, the Democrats must convince the middle class that they have genuinely shifted their ideology. Most of the Democratic candidates have revised their position to incorporate a more centrist approach to social policy and defense, but they have not yet convinced the elector-ate that they are sincere. Given the choice between the candidate of the rich and the candidate of the poor. during a recovery, most voters will choose the candidate of the rich.

Reaching the middle class and convincing it that the Democrats genuinely care not just about the poor, but about both the blue collar and the white collar workers and their families, is the most essendal task of the Democrats in 1984.

The writers, partners in the polling firm of Penn & Schoen Associates, contributed this comment to The New York Times.

The Party Loses Control Of Its Selection Process

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — Just when the Democratic Party establishment thought it had locked the door against another interloper capturing its presidential nomination Senator Gary Hart of Colorado has slipped through and asserted a strong claim to the prize. The implications of the collapsing candidacy of former Vice President Walter F. Mondale are hard to exaggerate.

Mr. Mondale was supposed to be the consensus candidate of a nominating process that represented the national constituencies of the Democratic Party and gave special influence to their organizational leaders. According to party rules and the calendar designed by the insiders, the choice of a nominee was to focus on "Super Tuesday," March 13, when nine states choose about 500 delegates to the Democratic cominating convention. It will be the closest approximation of a national primary the United States has seen. Only a national candidate with close links to the major constituency groups in every part of the country could emerge from that kind of test, it was thought. That man was Mr. Mondale, the legatee of both Hubert H. Humphrey and Jimmy Carter, the friend of labor, blacks and Jews, the en-dorsed choice of feminists and farmers, of teachers and conservationists. To launch Mr. Mondale oo his journey to consensus comination, his supporters on Capitol Hill arranged to select the congressional delegates to the nominating convention in late January, before the first popular votes were cast. By giving Mr. Mondale overwhelming support, capped by the personal en-dorsement of the House speaker, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., they sent a clear message to the party rank and file of their preference.

Between the House caucus and Super Tuesday, the architects of the Democratic cominating process including Mondale allies and labor officials - were persuaded to allow a little room for direct democracy. The Iowa and Maine cancuses and the New Hampshire primary fell outside "the window" that the party had established for delegate selec tion, as part of its strategy of compressiog and nationalizing the nominating process.

But those three small states had established a historical claim to sneaking in ahead of the others. Mr. Moodale had close personal alli-ances in Iowa and Maine, and he had campaigned successfully in New Hampshire in 1980 as point man for Jimmy Carter. There seemed little risk in indulging their vanity. Iowa delivered as expected. but New Hampshire and Maine proved disastrous for Mr. Mondale. Coming into Super Tuesday, the Democrats have a new front-runner who embodies almost everything designed to avoid.

Mr. Hart has been a senator for nine years, but politically, be is every bit as much a lone wolf as Mr. Carter was when he was governor of Georgia. His roots are in a small, conservative Western state whose growth psychology is far removed from the attitudes of the rural South and the urban industrial East, where the Democrats are strong.

Mr. Hart has gained his current ascendancy with the help of small oumbers of people in states where organized labor, blacks, Hispanics, Jews and other elements of the traditional Democratic coalition are conspicuously unrepresented.

The kids io their twenties who manned the phooes and knocked on doors to give Mr. Hart his 1,000vote margin in Maine do oot know or care about the big questions of Democratic coalition politics. They just liked the way Mr. Hart looked and talked and what he stood for:

novelty, excitement and change. As he moves to exploit his stun-ning breakthrough, Mr. Hart now-confronts the problem of dealing with those larger elements of the Democratic consotuency - a test that be saw George McGovern flunk when be was Mr. McGovern's manager in 1972, and which be saw Mr. Carter fumble as a candidate and fail as president. Mr. Hart may prove smarter and more adaptable than either of those longshots, and gn on to win the nomination. Or the Democratic establishmeot may prop up Mr. Mondale, turn to John Glenn of Ohio, or try to broker the nomination with a set of favorite sons and late-starting candidates. Only one thing is clear today. The plan for engineering an early con-sensus nomination of an establishment candidate has failed. And the campaign against Runald Reagan the Democrats hoped to begin this month will not be starting on time.

A Caution Against Overvaluing U.S.-Soviet Arms Negotiations

WASHINGTON — Did anyone blink when former President Jimmy Carter was quoted recently to the effect that U.S.-Soviet arms-control oegotiations, "even when they are oot making progress, helped to lessen natural and dangerous competition between either side for influence in the world's trouble spots"? Many Americans and Europeans assume that is true. A recent Atlantic Institute and Louis Harris poll found that a large percentage of West Europeans rank arms-control talks and continued dialogue with the Russians as being more important for Western security than ei-ther maintenance of the military balance or close cooperation with the United States.

Arms-control talks can have considerable merit in their own right. But to claim that such talks effectively restrain Soviet behavior around the globe represents (to borrow Dr. Johnson's phrase about second inarriages) a triumph of hope over experience. Recent history just does not support such a claim. Take a look at the record. Between 1970 and 1976, an era of arms-control breakthroughs and intensive dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union (including five summit meetings), the Russians also:

■ Provided considerable amounts of weapons and ammunition to back North Vietnam in By Kenneth Adelman

The writer is director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

■ Made provocative threats that widened the risks in the 1973 war in the Middle East, particularly by putting some Soviet divisions on alert and threatening to intervene militarily, which caused the United States to go on strategic

■ Expanded involvement by dispatching sig-nificant arms, Cuban soldiers and Soviet officers to various African countries.

Just a few days before the 1975 Helsinki summit, we also saw Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger warning the Russians against interfering in Portugal's internal affairs.

During these same years, five countries be-came Marxist — South Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Mozambique and Angola - nearly all with more than a little help from their friends in the Soviet Union. Two more - Ethiopia and Afghanistan — went Communist during the next two years (1977-78), again with considerable During those two years, SALT-2 negotia-

ed States opened four new arms-control arenas with the Russians. These included negotiations over a comprehensive test ban, Iodian Ocean naval demilitarization, cooventional arms transfers and anti-satellite weapons. In 1979 the arms-control spotlight focused on SALT-2. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance met with Soviet Ambassador Anatoli Dobrynin more than 20 times from January through May, before the treaty's celebrated signing at the Carter-Brezhnev summit in June.

But that same year came the flap over the Soviet brigade in Cuba and the Russians' false statements designed to inflame the incendiary situation in Iran after the American hostages were seized. Most distressing of all, 1979 ended with the invasion of Afghanistan — 25,000 Soviet troops by the year's close, followed shortly by 80,000 more.

None of these historical examples suggests that a U.S.-Soviet dialogue and active arms-control efforts are not valuable in and of themselves. They are. The world is a better place because of some past arms-control efforts and accords. And if we persevere, it can be improved still further.

For example, we would be much better off if its war against South Victnam, and failed to tions intensified, the Mutual and Balanced the Russians returned to the nuclear arms talks and agreed to a reasonable trade-off of forces that would provide deep reductions in strategic nuclear weapons and greater stability. We would all be better off if they agreed to climinate the entire class of intermediate-range, land-based nuclear weapons, or at least to reduce them to an equal low level.

President Reagan's recent statements have again emphasized the importance of these issues. As he said last week, "We should find ways to work together to meet the challenge of preserving peace. Living together in this nuclear age makes it imperative that we talk to each other, discuss our differences and seek solutions to the many problems that divide us."
Mutually acceptable arms-control agreements can be a key element in this cooperation.

So we should strive hard for our arms-control goals for what they can bring in by themselves, which is plenty. But just as we should not close our eyes to Soviet behavior for the sake of arms control, we should not burden arms-control efforts with hopes not borne ont by experience.

Neil Kinnock and the Bomb Over Cardiff

LONDON—Neil Kinnock, freshly returned from a trip to the United States, where he sowed his wild oats about unilateral nuclear disarmament in pretty barren soil, had to go up-country to Chesterfield to camgo up-country to Chesterneta to esti-paign for Tony Benn. This is on the order of asking Ronald Reagan to go to Connecticut to campaign for Low-ell Weicker: a duty. It is less so because the positions of Neil Kinnock, a "radical socialist" as be styles himself, and Tony Bean are so different. They are not, really. But Mr. Kin-nock is a totally different personality. Mr. Benn is a superb rabble-rous-er, as is Mr. Kinnock, who is young enough to be Mr. Benn's son. But although Mr. Kinnock the stemwinder will promise you that life will cease if Labor is not elected, and that under Margaret Thatcher the rich will prey on the poor until the last scrap of bread has been taken from their table, he does all of this most ingradatingly. Mr. Benn, by contrast, gives the impression that if he could get away with it he would introduce cannibalism to Britain, every Laborite being responsible for eating every Conservative until none were left.

But Mr. Kinnock did his duty in Chesterfield, and Mr. Benn was elect-ed. Now, Mr. Kinnock almost certainly will need to give him a post in the shadow cabinet — or risk the wrath of the small but potent constitneacy of Tony Benn. On the other hand, elevating him would mean making him conspicuous all over again, and frightening all those Conservatives who do not want to be eaten for breakfast or to surrender their atom bombs preparatory to surrendering to the Soviet Unioo. It was this subject that consumed much of an hour's talk we had recently. I began by asking whether Mr. Kinnock was a Communist fellowtraveler. This impression was collected from a misleading article that appeared in The Wall Street Journal.

Mr. Kinnock, in fact, favored a boycott of the Moscow Olympic Games even before the invasion of Afghani-stan, in protest against the Soviet persecution of dissidents. Here is the not-so-new face of the British unilateralist surrender people, as inflected by the Labor leader: 1. The Soviet Union could not absorb any country in Western Europe, and for that reason would not engage in military action against Europe. In the thoroughly unlikely event that the Soviet Union were to attempt such a thing. European resistance through the use of conventional forces would suffice to put a quietus on the whole thing.

3. The mere existence of a nuclear arsenal in Europe would raise the possibility of the use of nuclear weapons, which then would graduate into the probability of their use. At that point, the world is over, finished, because "there is no such thing as the winner of a nuclear war."

We have heard that song before, of course. And it is reassuring that in a poll taken at the time of the last British election in 1983, in which the Labor Party did less well than in any general election in years, Mr. Gallup discovered that 73 percent of the British voters opposed unilateral nuclear disarmament, and that 51 per-cent of those who voted for Labor also disapproved.

Still, we have in Mr. Kinnock an enormously appealing man who takes what in the United States is the George Kennan position. It reduces to this: The mere presence of nuclear bombs in our arsenal is an invitation not only that they be used, but that nuclear bombs be used against them. What if — one asks Mr. Kinnock, who would become prime minister in a Labor government — having got rid of NATO bases with ouclear arms and also having got rid of your own inventory, the Soviet Union would hand your government an ultima-tum: Surrender to the Soviet Army, or we will drop a bomb on Cardiff?

What you get for asking that ques-tion is a fatherly smile: There, there, son, go back to bed. There aren't any ghosts in your room, promise. So then you ask, what if the Soviet Union were to make good on its threat and, as they say in the war games, "take out Cardiff"? Suppose that, at that point, the president called you up and said, Mr. Prime Minister, would you like U.S. submarines with nuclear weapons to be instructed to give the Soviet Union a counterultimatum? Leave England alone, nr we'll take out Leningrad? He smiled again and said, "I would say to the president, thank you very much for calling, but the answer is no — that's the way for all of us to get killed."

God save the Queen. He'll have to if Neil Kinnock gets elected. Universal Press Syndicate.

U.S. Air Force Decides on a Switch in Cargo Planes By Richard Halloran New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The air force has decided, in a master plan for transport, that it wants to stop buying the Lockheed C.5 cargo plane after current production and to acquire 220 of the new C-17 aircraft, built by McDonnell Doug-

The plan, signed Sept. 29 by the secretary of the air force, Verne Orr, and its chief of staff, General Charles A. Gabriel, must be approved by Congress in the budget. So far, Congress has voted only development funds for the C-17.

The decision to push ahead for one of the higgest Defense Department programs in years seemed certain to revive a struggle between Lockheed and McDonnell Douglas for lucrative contracts. The cost of the first 180 C-17s, to be huilt by 1998, would be $21.5 hillion.

Jane's Rejects Espionage To Get Soviet Plane Data

By Ed Blanche

The Associated Press LONDON — The 1983-84 edition of "Jane's All the World's Aircraft," the reference work on civilian and military planes, contains hitherto-unpublished information on three new Soviet interceptors, a strategic bomber and the world's biggest transport plane -details of which are Soviet state secrets.

The fighters are the MiG-29, known to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as "Fulcrum:" the MiG-31, or "Foxbound," and the Sukhoi Su-27, or "Flanker."

Jane's compared the MiG-29 to the F-16 and F-18, two of the more advanced U.S. fighters, and said the MiG-31 and the Su-27 had true lookdown/shootdown capability, meaning the capacity to spot and shoot down aircraft flying below

The bomber, a Tupolev without a reference number that NATO officials call the "Blackjack," is called the "long-expected replacement for the intercontinental attack versions of the Tu-95 'Bear'."

The transport, Jane's said, is the Antonov An-400 "Condor." The book said a Soviet commentator had implied that the An-400 had been designed "for the rapid redeployment" of SS-20 missiles, the medium-range weapons that caused NATO to begin deploying U.S. cruise and Pershing-2 missile in Europe late last year.

That data, along with several other reports, represented the latest in a long line of coups for John W. Taylor. 61, the editor of the year-

Such information, Mr. Taylor said in an interview, did not come to Jane's through a network of agents or undercover sources inside the Soviet Union. Rather, he said, he read all be could find on Soviet planes, contacted old friends in key positions in Soviet aviation, and then compiled and analyzed the results.

"We don't encourage espionage," Mr. Taylor said. "For instance, a husinessman I know told me he was going to East Germany and asked if we wanted him to get photographs of Soviet planes.

"I turned him down. We don't want people getting chopped play-ing spies. I don't believe the odd scoop is worth risking the life of a friend or anyone else."

That concern has helped Mr. Taylor establish contacts all over the world during his 25 years as editor of the book.

U.S. officials, for example, let him sit in the cockpit of a prototype F-16 Falcon when the fighter was still on the restricted list and asked his opinion.

The Chinese gave him plans of their Nanchang Qiang-5 fighter, known to NATO as the "Fantan-A." This enabled him to include the fighter's plans, along with more than 1,000 words of description on what he called "this important Chinese aircraft," in the current edi-tion of the book.

Those contacts extend to within staff of six.

the Soviet Union. "I know most of the Soviet designers personally. I know what they're like and how they think," Mr. Taylor said, "Between that and assessing what they need to produce it's not really that hard to come up with the kind of data that we do."

"A lot of what we do is simply projecting on known data," he added. "For instance, the next major Soviet development will likely be a helicopter designed to shoot down other helicopters; that's where the gap is."

Mr. Taylor, an aviation engineer, works 100 hours a week for six months at collating the data that will be used for the yearbook, which this year lists 6,000 aircraft in its more than 900 pages. He has a

Jailed Black Nationalist 🌠 Tonight fould be Reportedly Gets Offer Of Release by S. Africa

By Allister Sparks

JOHANNESBURG - The South African government is offering to release the imprisoned black nationalist leader, Nelson Mandela, if he agrees to live in the nominally independent tribal bomeland" of Transkei, according to friends of the Mandela family

But the family friends say they doubt that Mr. Mandela, 65, who has served 21 years of a life sen-tence, will accept the condition of bis release hecause it would amount to a form of recognition of the "homeland," and thus of the white minority government's segre-gationist policies, hy his revolutionary African National Congress. Government officials did not respond to requests to confirm the News of the offer, which was published by a black newspaper bere Sunday, came only three days after South Africa released the founder of the Namibian nationalist movement, Herman Toivo ya Toivo, after 16 years' imprison-

The offer to Mr. Mandela was seeo as part of an effort by South Africa to project an image of re-form. The administration of Prime Minister P.W. Botha has recently adopted a new constitution giving token political representation to the mixed-race "coloreds" and Indian minorities for the first time. It is also on the point of signing a nonaggression treaty with oeighboring Mozambique, has initiated a truce in its long Angolan border war and raised hopes that it is ready to implement an indepen-dence settlement in South-West Africa, or Namibia.

Observers agree that the release of Mr. Mandela, regarded interna-tionally as the symbol of black resistance in South Africa, would bave a major impact. But it would he politically risky for the Botha government, ft could cause a back-lash among conservative whites and give a boost to the black underground, of which the ANC is the most important element.

"f think the government would like to release him hut they want to have a face-saving formula for doing so," one observer said. "The trouble is that the formula of using the Transkei is probably policially unacceptable to Mandela."

The offer to release Mr. Mandela, who was sentenced to life imprisonment in 1963 for plotting the overthrow of white minority rule, follows a request to the Pretoria government by Transkei's president, Kaiser D. Matanzima. Mr. Matanzima and Mr. Mandela are members of the royal family of that territory's Tembu trihe, hut while Mr. Mandela is a hero to th Africa's black nationalists, Mr. Matanzima is regarded as a quisling because of his participation in the apartheid system. Despite their political differ-ences, however, Mr. Matanzima has repeatedly asked the government to release his relative to Transkei. This would belp legitimize his own position, but people close to the situation believe the president also made the appeal out of considerations of family loyalty. His most recent request, made in homeland

ANGOLA

By Don Oberdorfer

WASHINGTON - The fate of the Reagan administracion's diplomatic initiative in southern Africa is likely to hinge on decisions made this month in Angola, in South Africa and, to an unknown extent, in the Soviet Union, according to administration sources.

If the Marxist government in Angola is going to provide a time-table for withdrawal of some or all of its Cuban troops -the key point in the three-year U.S. effort to arrange a general accommodation in southern Africa - the best chance for success will be this month, the sources said, while a rare momenturn exists in improved relations between old enemies and before dry-season fighting resumes.

U.S. officials hope that a schedule for departure of the Cubans will grow out of a unilateral South African withdrawal from the southern part of Angola and a South Afri-

-Angolan cease-fire in the area. Unless there is an early agree-ment on the Cuban issue from the Angolans, some officials fear, reoewed fighting is likely to be touched off by guerrilla raids in South African-cootrolled Namibia, South-West Africa, and thousands of South African troops may move back into Angola.

Should the diplomacy collapse and full-scale fighting resume, U.S. officials said, the Angolan govern-ment may be so pressed by insurgent forces that it may have to seek an increase in the 25,000 Cuban troops already in the country.

The argument is being made that it would be better for the Angolan government and a good deal less costly and risky for its superpower sponsor, the Soviet Union, to make a deal before a new round of mili-

The same-prospect, however, has touched off alarm bells among some U.S. conservative groups which have taken their opposition to the "State Department scheme" to the White House.

Howard Phillips, chairman of the Conservative Caucus, said that he and Richard Viguerie, publisher of the Conservative Digest, asked 10,000 of their followers recently to oppose U.S. recognition of Angola to cease supporting an anti-government insurgency io Angola.

Angola has been informed that U.S. diplomatic recognition would be addressed "io the context of an overall settlement." State Department officials said. They added that the presence of the Cubans was cited as the barrier to relations in U.S. statements in the Ford and

Carter administrations. Among the signs of unusual activity, in addition to the South African-Angolan arrangements,

 A Feb. 15 speech by Secretary of State George P. Shultz in which he talked about "a clearly positive evolution" under way io southern Angola. At the same time, it became known that a U.S. monitoring team would be involved in the South African disengagement, and a U.S. office for the purpose has since been opened in Namibia.

• A request by Mr. Shultz to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in their Stockholm meeting Jan. 18 for a new round of confidential Soviet-American discussions oo southern Africa. The Russians have not responded to this proposal, the sources said. • Higb-level U.S.-Aogolan meetings in Cape Verde in January and Zambia in February, U.S. offcials expect more such meetings with top Angolans later this month:

"We doo't have a breakthrough," cautioned a State Department official who has been deeply involved io the issue. "We doo't have a package deal,"

He spoke hopefully, however, about "building blocks" of diplomacy involving South Africa, Angola, Mozambique and several guerrilla groups and, for the first time, a momentum that seems to favor solutions rather than deepenand U.S. pressure oo South Africa ing conflicts in southern Africa.

U.S., Chinese Negotiators Struggle To Find Compromise on Air Services

In the end, they did oot succeed in finding a compromise, but hope remained that a solution could be found that would avoid a new confrootation, officials from both sides said Sunday after a 61/2-hour ses-

The immediate issue is additional air service between China and the United States, but the underlying problem, which makes it comated and politically sensitive, is the unofficial but strong relationship between the U.S. and the Chi-

Washington to approve a second U.S. carrier in return for additional flies two or three times week.

According to airline industry sources, China has demanded that Northwest first establish a subsidiary to handle its profitable business with Taiwan. Vienna's Magical Opernball

By Hebe Dorsey

VIENNA — Despite war and socialism, the Vienna Opera Ball still has magic.

Held last Thursday in the white, gold and red theater, decorated with 20,000 pink carnations, the white-tie-and-tails Opernball, attended by 7,000 people, was again. the climax of the carnival season, which included no less than 263 balls during February.

True to legend, the Viennese love to dance, and every group, including carpenters and street cleaners, has its own ball. A modest antique dealer who runs a shop near the Spanish Riding School said her fa-vorite was the Hunter's Ball, not L. S. ship the second s because she hunted but because "It's very elegant. We all wear diradis and shawls."

Sponsored by the Austrian gov-ernment, the Opera Ball, more than a hundred years old, is the biggest and most prestigious ball in Vienna and something of a national institution. It rates nonstop all-night television coverage, and as an anoouocer oo Austrian radio quipped. "It's the only time in the year when the taxpayer comes out a winner." The whole city festively agreed. Taxi drivers, humming "The Merry Widow" as they drove from the airport, asked clients whether they were in town for the Opera Ball. And taxi drivers taking them back to the airport asked if they had been to the Opera Ball. Organized with the same exacting precision as under Emperor Franz Josef, the ball opened at 10 P.M. sharp with dancing by stars of the Staatsoper ballet, after the national anthem. Then 200 debutantes came down gigantic steps and filled the stage and the orchestra level, emptied of all its seats. Wearing white gowns, long white gloves and little crystal coronets, they curtseyed, en masse, to Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, who took the place of President Rudolf Kirchschläger, who was visiting the United States. They then went through elaborate and old-fash-ioned polonaise measures — ending with a wide, floor-level curtsey, this time to their escorts. After this most formal beginning, the orches-tra broke into "The Bine Danube," the debutantes and their escorts started waltzing - and the ball was declared open. From then on, the floor was a sea

dance floor was taking your life into your hands, especially when the orchestra broke into a gallop. Then, it was like being caught in a human stampede — a noisy one, with the hundreds of decorations jingling up and down oo the chests of officers, all more decorated than in an operetta. There were several more orchestras up and down the house, and dancing also going on in private parties held high up in the dressing rooms.

On the whole, the dresses were not the high-fashion variety and neither were the jewels. But it did not matter, since the colors - red, turquoise, yellow, green and hot pink -looked wonderful, especially as women filled the auditorium's boxes, like some turn-of-the-centuboxes, like some turn-of-the-century painting. They belonged to another, much merrier world that dered from box to box, exchanging seemed, for this one evening to social fluff talk - and, one was hold more glitter than Paris or New York. Cinema's New Wave, 25 Years Later

By Vincent Canby New York Times Service

TEW YORK - Give or take a 1 few months, this year is the 25th anniversary of the Nouvelle Vague, that New Wave of young French filmmakers who, first by their sometimes outrageous statements and then by the extraordinary films they made to support those statements, forever changed the look of -as well as the way we look at - movies.

Their oew criticism, the sweeping and, at the time, revolutionary announcement that all films, even the most ghastly collaborations, could be seen as the work of a single artistic sensibility, that is, of the director as "author,"

Their films, made on limited budgets in the real world outside the walls of the studios, turned poverty into visual assets. They came up with new editing tricks, including the jump-cut that functions as cinema shorthand. They rediscovered others - such as the "iris," by which a portion of an image can be isolated on an otherwise black screen—that had been abandoned as old-fashioned with the urrival of the talkies. It was almost as if films were being reinvented.

It's not stretching things to sug-gest that had there been no Jean-Luc Godard, there would have been no Rainer Werner Fassoften arbitrary to attempt to chart these lines of influence, I also sus-pect that had there been oo Fran-çois Truffant, New York theaters seemed to be West German. That the members of the New Wave have produced such a large, remarkable body of work has less to do with politics and social reform than with aesthetics and pure, unmitigated rage. The movement didn't just happen. The Cahiers du Cinéma critics were reacting against "quality" French films — slick, middlebrow, essectially genteel studio-shot Spending hours watching films ai Henri Langlois's Cinemathoque, they were fascinated by the energy of American films. They also came up with a theory to explain what they saw to be the consistently personal style of such Hollywood directors as Howard Hawks, John Ford, George Cukor, Nicholas Ray and Joseph Losey. It had to do with the "tension" they detected be-tween the personality of the director and the genre he happened to be working in, from Westerns to slap-stick comedies to films of social import to romances.

The Cahiers manifesto, credited to Truffaut but understood to represent the consensus, was a demand for a new kind of French film -or rather for a film industry that would recognize the world had changed since 1932 and would finance personal films shot inexpensively outside the stuffy studios.

Though the new criticism was responsible for a lot of nonsense written about directors who, clearly, were not auteurs of merit, it pointed the way to a less pious kind of criticism. Henceforth films would oot be judged on their social value but on their artistic merits, no matter how seemingly fritolous the work. The initial successes of the Chabrol, Truffant, Godard and Malle films prompted the kind of youngdirector craze in France that swept Hollywood in 1969 after the hit of "Easy Rider." French producers fell over each other in their eageroess to sign people to make more of these oew, personal films on-thecheap.

The more durable of them demonstrated oot only that films of rare and original quality could be made inexpensively, with new lightweight equipment, and could find a public, but that filmmakers with radically different concerns could flourish in the same market, as friends, at least in those early days.

The New Wave directors had the courage and talent — as well as the opportunity - to pursue their particular obsessions. Time was good to them, of course. They also made good use of it.

Thriving Futures Brokers May Be Near a Shakeout

By R.J. MAIDENBERG

New York Times Service OCA RATON, Florida - Trouble is brewing in the booming futures-brokerage business. Indeed, the futures-brokerage industry may be on the verge of a shakeout, despite the enormous growth of futures and options business in recent years.

In recent weeks, several major futures-brokerage houses, all of which shared in the growing futures business, sharply reduced their staffs and operations. A number of other houses are expected to follow suit.

The main reason for this odd turn of events is that the overhead costs of these brokers are steadily exceeding commission income, according to many of the industry leaders gathering for the annual convention of the

Futures Industry Association at the Boca Raton Hotel here While the problem of shrinking futures-brokerage profits has caused several

Departure of prominent Chicago firm highlights small nonclearing brokers to the problem. close their doors, the au-nouncement last week by Maduff & Sons, a prominent Chicago futures house, that it was voluntarily quitting the retail futures-brokerage business highlighted the problem.

"It's not every day that a major clearing member of an exchange gives up most of its business," said Jerrold E. Salzman, counsel to the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

"What was also surprising was that Maduff was meeting the capital requirements of all the exchanges that it was a member of. But they told us that they feared they might not be able to do so for long," Mr. Salzman added.

With the help of the exchanges, Maduff's 5,000 customers, a large number for a futures-only house, were immediately parceled out to other brokers.

Charles B. Epstein, vice president of Lind-Waldock Inc., the largest discount futures broker, said Maduff's problem was that its bankers had become reluctant to extend credit lines. Lind-Waldock assumed 1,200 of Maduff's discount customers, with the rest going to full-service brokerage houses.

Futures discount brokers only offer executions of orders, while the full-service houses provide research and trading advice to their clients. Discount customers pay $18 to $25 for a futures transaction, which is about a fourth the commission charged by the full-service bouses.

As a result, Mr. Epstein said, the discounters last year accounted for at least 30 percent of the 140 million futures contracts traded. In 1982, they had about 20 percent of 112,4 million

"But such figures are becoming meaningless because, let's face it, every house today offers discounts to customers according to the amount of business done," be said. "The only advantage we discounters have is low overhead, which we pass on to our customers in the form of low commissions.

The discounters are also thriving on the business given them by the increasing number of banks and other financial institutions capable of doing their own research and developing their own trading strategies, Mr. Epstein added. They only seek [ast and efficient order execution. Jeffrey A. Nichols, vice president, research, at Goldman, Sachs

& Co., said low discount rates were not the only reason for the profit squeeze on many brokerage houses. "Take the case of credit," Mr. Nichols said. "Banks always financed the commodities industry, even if they did think futures were something one did not mention in polite company. Today, the banks still finance the futures industry, but they are also capable of raising less expensive capital. This is important because the financial institutions are increasingly competing with the brokers they finance." Because of the expertise that these institutions have, as well as their overseas connections, Mr. Nichols continued, "they are in a good position to snare the large amount of futures and options business flowing in from foreign institutional hedgers." Thus the only place where the old-line futures brokers need not fear the powerful new competition is in the traditional farm and industrial commodities market because banks and most other financial institutions have been restricted to dealing in financial and gold futures and options. "But the farm and industrial futures markets have not been anywhere near as active and lucrative as the newer financial and stock index markets," he

If Trafalgar gets the go-ahead to renew its bid, and chooses to do so, the price almost certainly will be far higher. P&O, long a low-profit hodgepodge of ship-ping, construction and real estate, is starting to transform itself under a new chairman, the highly respected Jeffrey Sterling.

Dollar Declines; Analysts Say Drop May Slow

By Bob Hagerty

International Herald Tribune LONDON - The dollar ended the day in New York lower again Monday, although it steaded a bit late in the day in Europe.

Monday's fall strengthened the view that market sentiment has turned firmly against the dollar. "I think traders are looking for a rea-son to sell doltars," said Valerie Walker, an investment officer at Harris Bank in Chicago. But she and other analysts expect the de-scent of the dollar to slow.

Monday's drop was particularly marked against the yen and the Swiss franc. The dollar, which be-gan to plunge against the yen Friday, closed in London Monday at a two-year low of 223,35 to the year down from 228 Friday and 233 Thursday.

The U.S. currency also fell to 2.124 Swiss francs in London from 2.154 Friday.
Against the Deutsche mark, the dollar closed at a seven-month low of 2.5780, down modestly from 2.5835 Friday but far below the lit-year peak of 2.85 set in January. The dollar continued to drop in New York, finishing at 2.5715 DM from 2,5875 Friday, to $1,4865 to the pound from $1,4845, to 223,375 yen from 227,60 and to 7,9295 francs from 7,9855. The mark's rise against the dollar pulls it out of line with the currencies of the EMS, which is designed to limit short-term fluctuations.

The dollar met firm resistance when it fell to around 2.57 DM. and traders are beginning to take profits more quickly on each new decline. After the headlong retreat of the past month, Miss Walker said, "I just think the descent is going to be more gradual."

A survey of leading currency economists by the London-based

The surge of the yen had been long expected, but the swiftness of the move caught analysts by surprise. Tetsuo Adachi, a Londonbased economist at Long-Term Credit Bank of Japan, called the move "very, very reasonable" and predicted that the dollar will fall to

Why Does Mr. Fourthon Stay Down on the Farm? EC Farmers Squeezed by Banks, Possible Quotas and Falling Incomes

By Axel Krause

International Herald Tribuni LAMBALLE, France - Driving 10 minutes from this scenic, medieval town in northwestern France leads to a tidy, stone Breton farmbouse and an adjoining 47 bectares (116 acres) of orchards and farm-land, which the Fourchon family bought in 1941.

Relaxing over crepes and cider recently, Jean-Paul Fourchon, who is 29 years old and in 1976 joined his father in running the dairy farm, said that he was typical of many of France's 1.2 million farmers who were doing well. The farm has revenue of about 80,000 francs ($19,000) each month, mainly from sales of milk produced by its 65 cows, and the occasional sale of

National Can Is Studying Posner Bid

CHICAGO - National Can Corp. said it is studying a merger proposal from NVF Co., which is owned by the financier Victor Posner, NVF already owns more than 37 percent of the company's voting securities outstanding.

National Can said the offer. which calls for the merger of Na-tional Can with a newly formed subsidiary of NVF, provides for National Can stockholders to receive $40 for each common share, for a total of $410 million.

National Can said it is submitting the offer to a special commitsee of independent directors for recommendation. It said if agreement is reached on the proposal it would be at least four months before the transaction is completed. As previously announced, Na-tional Can recently has been studying various proposals, including a leveraged buyout.

Mr. Posner said he intends to honor National Can's existing arrangements with its employees and customers, to enter into employment agreements with some members of management and to provide an opportunity for certain senior executives to participate in the equity of the company.

The proposed transaction is subject to negotiating n definitive merger agreement, arranging for financing and evaluation of the fairness of the proposal by a special committee of independent directors of National Can.

Banks Accept Plan To Aid Japan Line

TOKYO - Japan Line Ltd. said Monday that a consortium of cred-itor banks led by Industrial Bank of Japan has agreed to its restructuring plan to prevent the company from being delisted from the Tokyo Stock Exchange because of accumulated debts.

Japan Line's managing director. Tooichi Owada, said that the company set up Green Shipowners Ltd. capitalized at 600 million yen ($2.57 million), in mid-February and has transferred to Green Shipowners the control of 10 of its 33 large tankers and one tanker owned by an overseas subsidiary. Under the agreement, the banks will freeze interest payments for four years on loans valued at 50 billion ven and will provide four years' grace for repayment of the principal, which was used to build the 11 tankers, Mr. Owada said.

Owing to the recession in the tanker market, Japan Line had a of last September, making total capital of 34.5 billion yen. Under stock exchange rules a company has to be delisted if its total losses exceed its capital.

2 French Banks to Offer Financing for Buyouts

By Axel Krause

International Herald Tribune PARIS -Two of France's leading nationalized banks. Paribas and Crédit du Nord, are teaming up to offer financing for manage ment buyouts in France.

Management buyouts are common in the United States and in Britain, but occur infrequently in continental Europe. In a typical transaction, a manager or group of managers in a company buy the operations with the help of outside financial backing.

Sometimes buyouts are referred to as being "leveraged," meaning that the company's assets are pledged to secure the financing for the transaction. Buyouts often occur in companies that are performing sluggishly. The outside investors who back the buyont hope that the managers can reinvigorate the company and restore its growth. At a news conference in Paris.

executives of Banque Paribas and Credit du Nord, both part of the Paribas financial group, said they were establishing France's first jointly owned fund that would seek investments in small and mediumsized "problem "companies in

The criteria that the banks set is that the companies be financially sound and that their top management be willing — and financially able — to participate in expansion.

"We have seen the leveraged or management buyout system work in the United States, largely because of tax advantages, but we now believe it will work here, and that ours soon will be imitated by others," Jean-Yves Haberer, Paribas' president and chief executive officer, told reporters.

The fund, Compagnie pour le Financement du Développement Iodustriel et Commercial, known as Cofidic, will be espitalized at 40 million francs ($5 million) initially,

Japanese See First Rise In Profits In 3 Years

TOKYO - Current profit of major Japanese companies in the year ending March 31 is expected to rise for the first time in three years, the economic daily newspa-per Nihon Keizai Shimbun report-ed Monday, after a survey of 875

It said profits are expected to be up by an average 9.4 percent after an 8.9-percent fall in 1982-83, and said current profit in 1984-85 is forecast to rise 20 percent as recovery spreads into industrial raw-material companies because of rising exports.

and will be seeking minority share holding in companies with annual sales of 2 million to 50 million holding company wit b the managfrancs, including subsidiaries of foreign companies.

Family-owned firms, particularly those facing liquidiation because of failure to find a successor for a deceased or retired owner, also are potential candidates for Cofidic.

Emphasizing that the fund expected to generate earnings mainly on the growth in value of its investment. David Dautresme, president of Credit du Nord, said that Cofidic would rely almost entirely on existing management, who would also participate in the initial financing and become shareholders in the company. "We think that shareholders who are managers of enterprises will be capable of making profits for us." be said.

Bankers cited as an example. among others, a Swiss industrial group that is interested in selling the controlling interest in its profitable French subsidiary, but to date has found no buyers. Several top managers of the company, which makes cardboard products and has annual sales of about 35 million francs, were prepared to invest about 750,000 francs to save the ers, and buy the mai prity interest in the subsidiary, a Paribas executive said. Cofidic is considering investing in at least five other companies in similar predicamen its, including the French subsidiary of a large U.S. company, with a nnual sales last year of 46 million francs, and

USA Today's Problem: Who (Not How Many) Buys the Paper

By Alex S. Jones New York Times Service

NEW YORK - For USA Today, booming airport sales and bright blue sidewalk news boxes have not been enough. The publica-tion that calls itself "the Nation's Newspaper" has found that to overcome skeptical advertisers, it must capture many more home and office subscribers. By offering a package of crisp color, lavish graphics and extra-short articles, Gannett Co. says its colorful but money-losing paper now sells more than 1.3 million copies a day, which would make it the third-largest U.S. newspaper. after the Wall Street Journal and the Daily News in New York.

But, according to the original plan, advertisers should be flocking to USA Today, and they are not.

The reason, many news media analysts and advertising executives say, is that USA Today bas stubborn, complex marketing problems ranging from confusion over whether it is a newspaper, a maga-zine or something in-between, to skepticism about who reads the pa-lion to $500 million, which could efforts by some EC governments to cut farm spending.

He and other bankers, along with EC officials, noted that inflation-adjusted farm incomes fell an average of 6 percent last year from a year earlier, after having climbed steadily during the two previous years. The reasons for the decline involved a combination of recessionary conditions in the EC. a decline in world agricultural trade, and relatively high prices for such requirements as energy, equipment and fertilizer.

Meantime, the number of people employed directly in agriculture is continuing to decline, to about § million currently from 9.3 million in 1977 and from 12 million in 1970, according to EC figures. Mr. Bon, among others, believes that the decline will continue.

"I am relatively pessimistic about the financial situation" of EC farmers "because I do not believe that the Common Agricultural Policy will go in the direction of providing more help," Mr. Bon said. The banker added that "there will be less money for supporting farmers over the years."

THE SPELLBINDERS: Charismatic Political Leadership

By Ann Ruth Willner, 212 pp. $17.95. Yale University Press, 302 Temple St., New Haven, Conn. 06520.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

THE word charisma has been debased, according to Ann Ruth Willner, by being applied to anyone with a touch of glamour or personal magnetism. While "gift of grace," the original meaning of charisma, was not so far from glamour or magnetism, the word has been taken up by the German sociologist Max Weber and used in a more profound sense. For him, charisma in society or politics implies "devotion to the specific sanctity, heroism or exemplary character of an individual person, and to the normative patterns or order reveale or ordained by him." It's this connotation that Wiliner examines in "The Spellhinders."

Some social critics have argued that charisma as a ruling force in society or politics is a thing of the past, that it requires a "pre-Carte-sian" social structure or a "magico-religious sian social structure or a "magico-religious ambience." As if it had an aura of political indecency, Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. has opposed the application of the word to democratic leaders. Other writers have found the idea of charisma incompatible with the bureaucratic restraints of the modern state.

Willner, who is a professor of political science at the University of Kansas, disagrees. Citing Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in Iran and the Rev. James Jones in Jonestown, Guy-ana, she sees charisma as a still-potent poliocal influence. In Asia and Africa especially, the necessary magico-religious ambience exists. Rather ominously, she reminds us that charis-matic leaders can be either godlike or demonic, leaving it for the reader to decide which of her leaving it for the reader to decide which of her candidates fits into which category.

Confining herself in "The Spellbinders" to political charisma, she analyzes the public images of Castro, Gandhi, Hitler, Mussolini, Roosevelt and Sukarno. Among those she rejected as not qualifying for charismatic stature are Churchill and Kennedy, who was at least partly responsible for the popularity of the word. The British, Willner says, are peculiarly resistant to charisma and perhaps that liarly resistant to charisma, and perhaps that explains her exclusion of Churchill. In the case of President Kennedy, she feels that he achieved only a posthumous charisma. She suggests that while he was alive, only a minority of intellectuals regarded him as what might be called a mythic figure.

As she sees it, the charismatic leader appears. in times of crisis or distress. President Roosein times of crisis or distress. President Roose-velt, for example, faced the Depression, and Castro took over a country that had been severely damaged politically and economically. Before Hitter and Mussolini, Germany and Italy saw themselves as having been "humiliated." In her view, the charismatic ruler often proclaims a goal or mission. His rhetoric tends toward a religious and unlitary vocabulary, leaning heavily oo figurative speech, which appears to have a primitive power missing from plain discourse. When President Roosevelt used the phrase "rendezvous with destiny," his audieoce "nearly went crazy" accordny," his audieoce "nearly went crazy" according to newspaper reports.

Extraordinary eyes, Willner says, are a feature of charismatic leaders. Castro's eyes have been described as "hypnotic in their intensity". and Hitler's eyes were said to be "like hands" that gripped men never to let go again." Mussolim had "profound and luminous eyes." And so, too, did Roosevelt and Sukarno. A prodigious memory, even more than a prodigious intellect, is another typical attribute, suggest more than it may be more important for the hand. mg that it may be more important for such a leader to recognize or identify things than to understand them.

Sometimes, Willner observes, interpreta-tions of charisma vary from culture to culture. For Indonesians, she says, Sukarno's conspicuous sexual activity was a sign of power or heroism, while Indians saw Gandhi's celibacy. as a conserving of energy and a demonstration of superhuman control. It is oot likely that charisma can be artificially created through massive use of the media. Either you have it, Willner implies, or you don't.

Though "The Spellbinders" is an ingenious and useful book, it suffers from a kind of single-mindedness that seems to prevent Willner from speculating on the future of charisma, or developing some of the implications she only hints at. She is so strict with herself and her material that there is very little feeling of pleasure in learning here. Instead, her scholarship comes across as a "discipline."

Leaders of Women's Sports Dismayed At Supreme Court Ruling on Title IX

NEW YORK - In the best tradition of never-saydefeat, supporters of women's sports are willing to take on anyone who challenges their rights - even if lege-level athletes. the opponent is the U.S. Supreme Court.

Title IX, which forbids sex discrimination in schools receiving federal aid.

The law has been a key factor in the explosion in women's sports in schools across the country in the last decade

"It's safe to say we're angry and dismayed at the decision," said Theresa Cusick, legislative associate with the project on Equal Educational Rights of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund.

"But." she added, "I don't think women athletes in the colleges will simply give up without a fight."
Under the Nixon, Ford and Carter administrations, Title IX was interpreted to cover all areas of an insulution receiving any type of federal money. But the Reagan administration argued Title IX affects only those departments or programs receiving federal aid — and the Supreme Court accepted that view.

Since few athletic programs receive federal aid, the logic of the court's ruling could have disastrous consequences for women's school athletics. The danger [of the court ruling] is that the public will interpret it and say. It's O.K. to discriminate," said Donna Lopiann, director of intercollegiate athlerics for women as the University of Texas-Austin.

Within hours of the Supreme Court decision, Senator Bob Packwood, an Oregon Republican, introduced legislation that would overturn the ruling and man-date that Title IX apply to all programs, including athletics, in a school receiving federal aid.

Representative Claudine Schneider, a Rhode Island
Republican, plans to introduce a similar bill, her office said, and believes it will pass. Last year the House approved, 414-8, a resolution against restricting Title IX.

Title IX, passed in 1972 as part of the Education Amendments, is the only federal legislation prohibiting sex discrimination in education. Said Lopiano. of women's athletic programs: When you look at where we were in 1972 and where "The implications of the decision are not really clear," said Margaret Dunkle, co-director of the Equality Center in Washington, "What we'll probably see is women and civil rights groups seeking clarifica-

Like others, she said only future court cases - or new congressional legislation - will settle the matter Cusick said the court's decision will not lead to any immediate change in women's sports programs, but could have a subtle long-term effect.

"When the time comes to have to cut the budgets," she said, "they will probably cut the warmen's budgets

Lietzke Winner In Golf Playoff As Bean Falters

United Press Interna-CORAL SPRINGS, Florida Andy Bean missed a 3-foot par putt on the first playoff hole, making Bruce Lietzke, with a par-5, the winner of a PGA tournament here Sunday. The two finished the 72 regulation holes at 8-under 280, Bean closing with a 72 and and Lietzke a 4-under 68.

J.C. Snesd's final-round 70 put him alone in third at 281. Mark McCumber (72) and Joey Sindelar (70) were at 283.

Bean had gone into the day with a two-shot lead over McCumber and a three-shot edge over Snead Lietzke had been another sho back. Lietzke finally caught Bean on the final hole.

Lietzke's second shot on the par-4 18th hit 6 feet to the left of the green but kicked off a mound and stopped 4 feet from the cup; he made his birdie, forcing the season's fifth sudden-death playoff.

"Because it was the first test of how the candidates would do. The big deal in Iowa was oot that Mondale won so hig, but that Gary Hart did hetter than expected, and John Glenn did worse than he had hoped for. This obviously affected what the media would do about the contest in New Hampshire, Many of them who had ignored Hart started concentrating on him and giving him momentum — at the expense of Glenn and the others who bombed out in Iowa. This is why Hart did so well in New Hampshire and Mondale did so badly."

Champagne Among the Longhorns

Houston Auction Is Serious Business Outfitted as High Fashion

By Wayne King New York Times Service

OUSTON — It had the look Hand feel of a designer show of the latest in fashion: the audience of black-tied Texans in $500 boots and 10-gailon hats and their wives in elegant gowns, plus two or three Europeans looking alightly bemused at it all.

The audience sipped champagne and good California cabernet with their filet mignon. But they ignored the young women sweeping about with silver trays, and instead watched with rapt attention as the curtain parted on the velvet-draped runway in the middle of the main ballroom of the Westin Galleria Hotel here

Down she came, 1,500 pounds (680 kilos) of longhorn beef with a speckled red hide, 48 inches (1.2 meters) of horns, and a majestically glowering look in her redrimmed eyes.

Dipping her great horns, she hooked into the sawdust in the iron-barred show corral, flung wood chips high over her back, dipped to the other side and threw up another heap.

A cowboy in the tight corral jumped out of the way, some Texans let out a whoop, and bidding oo the cow, christened with the unlikely came of FM Graves 77. got under way at something over $3,000 for a one-half interest.

Bidding closed a minute and a half later at $10,000, and another longhorn, YO Lady Houston, took her place.

Before it was over, at about midnight, the second annual Texas Legacy Show and Sale, an auction of longhorn cattle with a few Western artifacts thrown in, had oetted $1,1 million, averaging more than $18,000 for the 58 longhorns sold.

The show was of interest not simply as a piece of local color a barnyard in the ballroom is ootable even by Texas standards but also because it highlighted the emergence of the longhorn as an important bloodline in the cattle breeding industry. It also dramatized the changes taking place in the industry, the way cattle are hred and the way they are sold. The buyers, who include breeders, ranchers and investors, did not buy just beef, they bought

In some cases, that was all they bought: semen, eggs and embry-os. The big, fiercely independent animals themselves were almost Half a million dollars was paid for a one-third interest in a bull named Classic Quintana 340, who will probably never look a cow in the eye unless it is over a very high fence. His semen will he collected, frozen and sold. A 10-percent interest in a cow named Measles went for $61,000, and Measles probably will never give birth to a calf of her own. Instead, she is to be given hormone injections to increase her fertility, and the 10 to 20 eggs she produces will be fertilized artificially with semen from a champion. The embryos thus produced will then he flushed from her body and implanted in other, far less valuable cows. The trans- Brahmas - a few years ago in ly in that time. Thus, among items anctioned at the show here were 100 units of semen from a bull named Redmac Beau Butler, described as "an exciting young herdsire," with a horn-spread of 57 inches, just a few inches short of the 61 inches sported by his sire, Classic, the longest-horned bull in the breed, and at $1 million, the most Bidders at the show insist that what they are buying is the longhorn's legendary toughness: resistance to disease, foraging ability and an extraordinary survival rate among calves. They're oot buying beef," said Maribeth Vineyard, & longhorn rancher who sold off her "red Braymers" - as Texans like to call what everybody else calls favor of the emergent longhorn

"They don't give a hoot about beef —they're buying horns," she said. "They must have horns." Whatever the reason, the longhorn, all hut extinct two decades ago and regarded as a romantic throwback with no commercial value to stockmen, is undergoing an extraordinary renaissance. For instance, Measles, whose 10 percent price tag of $61,000 indicates a whole-cow value of $610,000, sold six years ago at what was then an unheard of record of $17,000.

A buyer of a 10 percent share, H. C. Carter of Carter Longhorns in Dripping Springs, Texas, said that despite the high prices being paid, longhorns are a gamble.
"Whether we're talking about something that's a fad or something that is a trend, we won't know for five years," Carter said. But I think it's a trend."

They are not welfare cattle like these exotic breeds," he said. You don't have to hire $1,500-amonth cowboys to spoon-feed with discovering a new species of a tiny crah near his beachside villa in noda. The emperor found two specimens of the crab, in Novemher 1977 and January 1978, according to Tsune Sakai, chairman of the Japanese Society for Crustaceology and honorary professor of Yokobama University. He said the crah is a fan-shaped crustacean with a shell only 0.4 inches (1 centimeter). long and 0.6 inches wide.

Julian Lennon, 20, son of the late John Lemon, the former Beatle, says he has formed his own band and hopes to have a record out by the end of 1984. "We will evectual-ly tour, but we want to make sure we've got it right before we show ourselves," Lennon said in London before boarding leaving for New York, where he plans to talk with record company executives. Len-non said he will be the lead singer and co-write songs with the guitarist, Justin Clayton.

Katie Rabett, frequeotly described as the latest guilfriend of Britain's Prince Andrew, has admit-ted posing for a oude photo ses-sion, the News of the World newspaper said Sunday. Rabett, 23, bmitted a sworn statement in the High Court Thursday, denying that she posed in the oude professionally after the newspaper published what it said was a oude picture of her last week. The photographer Philip Lindsay produced a counteraffidavit, asserting that the shots were genuine and he had taken them. Now, the paper says, Ra-bett's lawyer, Richard Sykes, has written to its lawyers acknowledging that the photos are genuine and quoted him as saying: "However, nude photographs being taken." As "testimony of love for God," one of the Netherlands' richest men has decided to donate his fortune of more than 400 million guilders (about $140 million) to charity. Neustant international Prize for Literature. Haavikko, who works in a Helsinki publishing house and also writes novels and plays, was chosen from 11 nominees for the award, given jointly by the University of Oklahoma and its scholarly journal, World Literature Today.

Ivar Ivask, World Literature Today day editor and chairman of the day editor and chairman of the 1984 jury said Jorge Luis Borge of Argentina came in second.

The French actess Isabelle Adjani won the best actress award for her role in a sultry thriller, "L'Etc Meurtrier" at the French Film Academy's annual Cesar awards in Paris. Coluche, a paunchy comedi-an who ran briefly for the French presidency in 1981, won the best actor award for his role as an for mer policeman in "Tchao Pantin." The best French film award was shared by "Le Bal," by the Italian director Ettore Scola, portraying five decades of Parisian life view from a dance hall floor, and Manrice Pialat's "A Nos Amours," about a troubled teen-aged girl unable to fall in love.

President Ronald Reagan and his wife, Nancy, observed their 32d wedding anniversary privately at the White House in Washington Sunday. Sheila Tate, the press secretary for Mrs. Reagan, said the couple was spending the day alone and did not plan a party. Earlier in the week, she quoted Mrs. Reagan as saying, "I cannot believe it's been 32 years. It seems like 32 min-utes." The Reagans were married oo March 4, 1952, about three years after he was divorced from actress Jane Wyman. The late William Holdeo was hest mao-
